

Bach on Electric Cello to Celebrate
“Bach in the Subways” 10th Anniversary
Worldwide Public Performances March 19-25

New York City (February-March 2020) – Each weekend until the global celebration, cellist Dale Henderson performs free subway concerts featuring J.S. Bach’s Cello Suites on electric cello. Henderson celebrates 10 years since he broke traditional boundaries for classical music to found “Bach in the Subways,” 5 years since the project exploded into an international music movement. Now Henderson pushes new limits for classical.

On February 20, 2010, Henderson offered his first in a passionate campaign of free performances of Bach's Suites on traditional cello in the subways of New York City. With classical music audiences on the decline, he wanted to "sow the seeds for future generations of classical music lovers" by breaking the music out of its traditional box and exposing people to the enchantment of the live art form.

A year later he invited other musicians to join him for Bach's birthday on March 21. Within four years, 1000s of musicians in over 200 cities in 40 countries around the globe joined in bringing live Bach to the people in countless public places. The global celebration happened every year since, slated for March 19-25 this year.
